Their invention of a blue light emitting diode, or LED, was a milestone that now serves in white-light bulbs, computer and cell phone displays, billboards and hundreds of other applications. The uses are growing and the invention has dramatically changed the landscape of the lighting industry, ultimately creating valuable investment opportunities in less obvious areas. When improving lighting energy performance LED sources have become the number one efficiency recommendation. LED lighting has been high on the wider energy efficiency agenda for several years, but right now no other technology change offers the same level of power reduction, whilst maintaining or improving on operational performance. The new year lighting spectacle in New York's Times Square which highlighted the advances made with LED lighting in recent years with ever brighter and more energy efficient bulbs.
